

The New Criterion

Features

January 2000

Willa Cather's "The Professor's House"

by Donald Lyons

For there to be a humanitas and for this to build up a "world" around itself, a habitable "cosmos" on earth, this classical common sense posited a natural and divine "cosmos" as an original and prior ontological model, independent of all human manipulation.

—Marc Fumaroli (1999)

Willa Cather's novel The Professor's House (1925) is an inquiry into the nature of civilization, of man's impulse to civilize and create. The book holds in majestic and mournful equipoise both the nobility of the civilizing instinct and the certainty of its frustration.

The book is divided into three books of unequal length and kind. The first (and longest, taking up almost two-thirds of the novel), called "The Family," tells of Godfrey St. Peter, aged fifty-two, a history professor at an unnamed college on a Great Lake, a man with a wi ...

Donald Lyons

more from this author

This article originally appeared in The New Criterion, Volume 18 January 2000, on page 10

Copyright © 2008 The New Criterion | www.newcriterion.com

<http://www.newcriterion.com/articles.cfm/cather-lyons-2734>