

The New Criterion

Letters

April 2007

Revisiting "Catalonia" again

by Keith Windschuttle

A letter from Keith Windschuttle.

To the Editors:

George Orwell was a great writer and a good man but he was not perfect. Anthony Daniels's re-reading of Homage to Catalonia [The New Criterion, February 2007] performs a public service by showing that, although he was one of the first English socialists to denounce the tyranny of the Soviet Union, Orwell's romanticism about the Spanish working class nonetheless harbored a reverence for totalitarianism of its own. There are other aspects of Orwell's political writings that also deserve to be better known.

When I taught journalism in the late 1970s, I used to cite Down and Out in Paris and London and The Road to Wigan Pier as classic examples of the participant-observer genre. I thought they were strictly autobiographical accounts of events Orwell had witnessed and experiences he had lived through. I also thought that, being authored by Orwell, their facts would be scrupulous. ...

Keith Windschuttle's latest book is The White Australia Policy (Macleay Press). His website is www.sydneyline.com.

more from this author

This article originally appeared in The New Criterion, Volume 25 April 2007, on page 95

Copyright © 2012 The New Criterion | www.newcriterion.com

<http://www.newcriterion.com/articles.cfm/revisiting-catalonia-again-2-3149>